Lava Media is a multimedia company founded by Jason Flom (former chairman of Virgin Records and the Capitol Music Group). Its subsidiary record label Lava Records is home to major artists like Greta Van Fleet, Jessie J, Lorde, and more, and is currently developing new signings Kat Cuning, somegirlnamedanna, and South of Eden. The group has also launched a series of successful podcasts under Lava for Good, which include “Wrongful Conviction: Junk Science,” hosted by Innocence Project Ambassador Josh Dubin, and “Wrongful Conviction: False Confessions,” hosted by “Making a Murderer” lawyers Laura Nirider and Steve Drizin.

In its new partnership with Primary Wave, the two will collaborate on new signings, catalog acquisitions, co-writes, brand partnerships, synch placements, and media developments across both rosters. Primary Wave will also provide marketing and branding support for the podcasts as well as access to Primary Wave’s roster of artists, producers, and writers.
